Sharing Jesus IN A SMALL COMMUNITY

Rural Ministry in Montana

We spent the first decade of our marriage in the city of Ft. Collins, Colorado, where Andy worked as a deputy at the county jail. Now we live in rural Montana, 45 miles from a town with any services. Most people here are sheep or cattle ranchers, but we aren't. What brought us here?

While working full-time at the jail, Andy was preaching part-time at a church in Pierce, Colorado. He sensed God calling him into full-time ministry, so he began applying to churches. No doors opened. Then Andy remembered the organization his parents had served with when he was a boy: Village Missions. It seemed a perfect fit for us; we love rural areas and rural people, and Village Missions is committed to helping rural churches thrive. Village Missions accepted us in 2017, and we moved to Ridgway, Montana, the following year.

Our church is small but has a proportionally large number of kids. We weren't expecting to have this much of a children's ministry here, but that is what God had planned!

Last summer, God gave Staci the idea of gathering a group of believers to walk and pray through the local school in Ekalaka (40 miles away). Staci contacted the school superintendent. He was supportive and said he would unlock the school for us.

One week before school started, 13 people from four different churches walked the halls and prayed for each teacher and the students. It was such a special time!

Then God opened another opportunity for us.

The superintendent contacted Staci and asked if we'd like to enter a float in the Homecoming Parade at the beginning of September. We again cooperated with the four other churches to make a float with the message 'For God So Loved Ekalaka.' Some volunteers threw candy from the float while others handed out copies of the Gospel of John and a bookmark invitation with the churches' service times.

When we were first assigned to Ridgway, some doubted we would make it very long in this remote community. Over eight years later, by the grace of our great God, we are still here preaching the Word, loving the people, and helping them and their children know and follow Jesus.

The Hall family has pastored in Ridgway, MT, since 2018. Ridgeway is one of VM's most remote fields—40 miles from the nearest school and services. Their children join them in many aspects of ministry.
